The School of Communication and Information (SC&I) was established during the 1982-1983 academic year, as a result of a merger of the Graduate School of Library and Information Studies (GSLIS) with the College of Communication -- the latter consisting of the Department of Communication and the Department of Journalism and Mass Media. The merger occurred during the reorganization of Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey. The original by-laws were drafted by a joint committee composed of faculty from the constituent elements of the new School. They were adopted by action of the Faculty of the School on November 29, 1983.
